I. THE FOODTURE

2019-2020 Macro Trends to Look Out For

The visual, verbal, atmospheric and experiential ways in which food and beverage is delivered through a brand or service is via the cultural story it tells.

Four of the latest, Most Interesting and Fast Moving Macro Cultural Trends in the Food and Beverage Arena

NURTURE US

We are seeing a continued rise in global respect for all that is provided by our planet. Consequently, not wasting and instead nurturing nature's ingredients (for example 'Seacuterie') and treating them with respect by using artisan, traditional and 'proper' preparation methods.

FLAMBOYANCE

Tribalism is making a comeback. This is demonstrated through multisensorial experience and drama in food culture. The Insta-culture continues to drive this 'super-creativity' through attention-grabbing and flamboyant expressions of gastronomy.

KIND TO ME

Due to the previous mass production of food, targeted effects and personalization were largely underleveraged in the consumerist culture. People are now becoming less willing to make compromises with their food and drink, because it is more and more a buyers' market.

FREEDOM & FEAR (AI ECONOMY)

There is a dichotomy in the benefit that our modern, connected, 'algorithmic' society brings. We applaud the use of tech and culinary expertise to make food even more convenient to our own personal needs, BUT food's origin is coming under scrutiny after many exposures, the people's revolution has been driven by an unprecedented period of mistrust in institutions.

II. EATSIGHTING

That includes an element of unexpected surprises.*

#1 LICHEN

Lichens are plentiful – they grow on every continent at nearly every elevation – and come in a huge range of flavours, colors, and varieties.

#2 BOOZA

What if you could make gelato even richer and creamier? Enter booza, otherwise known as Arabic ice cream, or dondurma in Turkey.

#3 DONBURI

Donburi are ubiquitous and wide-ranging in Japan, referring to a combination of proteins and/or vegetables simmered in a flavourful sauce that typically includes dashi, soy sauce, and mirin.

#4 YUZU KOSHO

It has traditionally been used on Japanese hot pot stews and miso soups, but the possibilities are practically endless, particularly because various recipes or retail products have differing flavour profiles.

#5 MANGOSTEEN

Mangosteens are prized for their unique sweet, tangy, juicy, floral flavour. National Geographic declared the fruit to be the "The Most Exquisite Fruit of the Tropics."

10 Flavours You Should Watch in 2019 and Beyond

#6 ASHWAGANDHA

The root of this plant has long been used in Ayurveda, the alternative medicine system that developed in India and has now spread around the world.

#7 MAMEY

Mamey sapote is often confused with a similar fruit called the sopadilla, but it has a flavour that's all its own – and hard to describe. It is common in Cuba and Miami where it can be found in milkshakes & ice cream.

#8 CHAMOY

Chamoy most often refers to the bottled sauce made by adding chili powder to a pickling liquid used to preserve fruit, creating a intensely fruity, salty, sweet, sour, spicy condiment.

#9 TERPENES

Terpenes, the oils that are responsible for the flavours and aromas in cannabis. Now chefs and product developers are starting to consider those terpene profiles as they craft products and dishes.

#10 KOJI

Koji is a mold or fungus, specifically, an ancient, white, fluffy mold that is traditionally grown on rice or another grain in China or Japan. Used to ferment fruits and vegetables and create umami-rich products like soy sauce and miso.
